What is a performance Improvement Plan?

A performance improvement plan (PIP), also known as a performance action plan, is a tool to give an employee with performance deficiencies the opportunity to succeed. It may be used to address failures to meet specific job goals or to ameliorate behavior-related concerns.

Circumstances where Performance Improvement Plan (PIP) can be Implemented:

- Consistently Poor Performance/Below Expectation- If an employee consistently fails for 3 times to meet performance expectations or if there is a decline in the work quality.
- Failure to Clear the Client Interview - If any employee is on bench and unable to clear 3 client interviews consecutively.
- Failure to Meet Targets/ Goals - If an employee consistently falls short of achieving assigned goals/targets for 3 times.
- Behavioral Issues - Instances of unprofessional behavior or inappropriate conduct in the workplace.
- Skill Gaps - If an employee lacks certain skills necessary for their role or fails to develop skills despite opportunities for training and development.
- Failure to Follow Policies and Procedure - Repeated violations of company policies, procedures, or ethical Guidelines.
- Customer/Client Complaints - If there are consistent complaints from customer/clients about the employee's performance or behavior.

Key Components of a Performance Improvement Plan:

- Identification of Performance Improvement Issues: Clearly outlining the areas where the employee's performance is lacking and specifying the expectations that need improvement.
- Goals and Objectives: Setting clear and measurable performance goals and objectives that the employee needs to achieve within a specified timeframe. These goals should be realistic, attainable, and directly related to the identified performance issues.
- Support and Resources: Providing necessary support, resources, and training to help the employee meet the performance expectations. This may involve additional training, mentoring, or access to relevant tools and resources.
- Monitoring and Feedback : Regularly monitoring the employee's progress and providing constructive feedback along the way. This could involve periodic check-ins, performance reviews, or evaluations to track improvements.
- Timeline: Establishing a specific timeline for the Performance Improvement Plan, which typically ranges from a few weeks to a few months, depending on the nature and severity of the performance issues.
- Consequences: Clearly communicating the consequences of not meeting the performance expectations outlined in the plan. This may involve further disciplinary actions, up to and including termination, if improvements are not made within the specified timeframe.

Note: It's important for employers to clearly communicate the reason for placing an employee in PIP, provide specific examples, and outline the expectations for improvement. The goal is to help the employee understand the areas that need enhancement and provide support to facilitate positive changes in their performance.

Process:

- Once any of the above state circumstances occurs then management can give him/her a final chance to step up his/her productivity through a performance improvement plan after the discussion.
- PIP will clearly state the steps the employee needs to take to make the necessary improvements.
- An employee performance improvement plan is written by the employee manager and submitted to HR.
- There will be a regular/weekly follow up by the Manager for the task performance.
- After the completion of the PIP timeline performance feedback will be evaluated by the Direct Manager and Management.

- PIP term will be for 2 months and in the third month an employee will come under Exit/Relieving Process if the objectives stated in the PIP are not met.
